Week in Review

- The potential for a US-China trade war dominated markets last week, as equities sold off amid the continuing rhetoric. The Chinese Renminbi also came under pressure as Chinese central bankers cut the Reserve Requirement Ratio on the back of concerns over the Chinese economy.
- The US dollar continued to appreciate against a basket of peers, particularly against emerging market currencies, which have been caught right in the middle of the US-Chinese spat. The US dollar was also helped by a slew of positive economic releases including solid labour market data, and steady inflation expectations.
- Political risk remained a focus in Europe as Angela Merkel attempts to build a consensus position on the migrant crisis, both domestically and with key eurozone allies whilst the pressure on Theresa May continues to be ramped up as the Brexit negotiations enter a key phase.
