Annuity Rates

An annuity is designed to provide you with a regular and guaranteed income for the rest of your life. It is important to choose an annuity that reflects your needs and those of your spouse in retirement, so seeking financial advice before you make a decision is important.

You can tailor your annuity to match your needs by adding different benefits – such as having a minimum guaranteed period or a spouse's pension. As you can see from the table below any additional benefits selected will impact on the income you receive.

Spouse's Pension	Escalation % per annum	Guarantee Period	Annual Income

Spouse's pension

This is the amount of continuing income that would be paid on death i.e. 50% spouse's income would mean that a continuing income of 50% of the retirees annual income would be paid to the surviving spouse.

Escalation

You can decide to have your annuity income increase year on year by adding escalation i.e. 1.5% escalation would mean that your annual income increases by that amount every year.

Guarantee period

Having a guaranteed period means that your pension income continues even if you die early on i.e. a 10-year guarantee period would ensure that your income is paid for a minimum of the first ten years, even if you die during this period. Any guaranteed payments after death will be paid to your estate. However, once the annuity has been up and running for ten years, the guarantee period ends.

Age can make a difference to your annuity income

For decades, people have used annuities to provide the income they need in retirement. As retirement ages have increased and people are now working longer, many delay purchasing their annuity until they are a little bit older. For many, this is good news for their annuity income as the older you are, the greater the income you will receive for your purchase amount.
