

Mixed returns as inflation fears and supply strains continue

The major indexes ended the week mixed as investors weighed strong economic and profits data against ongoing supply strains, a rise in COVID-19 numbers and inflation fears. The world equity market is up 31% in euro terms so far this year, and its path to get here has seen just one 5% correction along the way.

On Wednesday, the Fed will release minutes from the FOMC meeting held earlier this month. The next chair of the Federal Reserve could be decided by next week. The race for the position is currently between the current chair, Jerome Powell and Lael Brainard, a Fed Board Governor. Compared to Powell, Brainard is considered slightly more dovish among Fed Officials, favoring looser monetary policy. Meaning it would take longer to tighten policies including raising interest rates if Brainard prevails.

In Europe, stocks moved cautiously higher, as the spread of COVID-19 clouded the economic outlook. Fears of further coronavirus restrictions in Europe after Germany and Austria's announcements of a nationwide lockdown also added to downward pressure on Core eurozone bond yields. Dovish comments from European Central Bank (ECB) President Christine Lagarde saw yields fall last week as she pushed back against interest rate increases. This decision was based on the belief that inflation would fade and indicated asset purchases could continue beyond the expiry of the Pandemic Emergency Purchase Programme.
