

Earnings pulls equities higher as markets finish the week on a high

Stock markets rose over the course of last week as a slew of earnings and US economic data provided confidence to equity bulls. Core inflation (which strips out food and energy costs) was up 4.0% for the year to the end of September. Whilst, well in excess of the approximate 2% target, it was in line with market expectations. Producer prices rose 0.5% in September, which was less than in August and below consensus estimates. This combined with a post-pandemic low in jobless claims to give the S&P 500 its best day since March last Thursday. There were also reassuring tones emanating from the latest Fed minutes, which stated that short end interest rates would remain depressed into the medium term. On Friday, Retail Sales for September topped expectations by coming in at 0.7% versus a forecast of -0.2%.

Q3 earnings season started with a bank led by the big US banks. Goldman Sachs saw revenue for the first nine months of the year hit, $46.7bn – which is higher than any full calendar year they have ever report. JP Morgan and Morgan Stanley saw fees rise 52% and 67% respectively, with Citibank and Bank of America also enjoying a strong earnings release.

Eurozone equities were higher last week, taking their lead from the US despite mixed economic data and a cut in growth forecasts from a number of German economic institutions. In the UK, GDP in August rose just 0.4% whilst the July figure was revised down from +0.1% to -0.1%. On a more positive note, the latest labour market data saw the largest three month increase in employment since the summer of 2015 as the unemployment rate fell to 4.5%. In Japan, the lower house of parliament has been dissolved, setting the stage for a Halloween General Election as new Prime Minister Fumio Kishida looks to consolidate power.
