

Markets snap losing streak as sentiment becomes extended

Stocks recovered from mid-week lows to finish the week higher. Wednesday's US inflation data weighed most heavily on sentiment as the headline consumer price inflation for the year to the end of March came in at 8.3%. This was lower than the previous month, but crucially more than the consensus forecast of 8.1%. Commentators also took note of the strong rise in the services component of the overall figure as, theoretically, this should not be as influenced by the 'supply chain blockage' narrative. Worries over inflation were also evident in US consumer sentiment readings released on Friday, which hit its lowest level in 13 years.

Within the eurozone, ECB President Lagarde gave the clearest indication yet that eurozone rates are going to move higher. In prepared remarks in Slovenia, she stated that the bond buying programmes would continue to be scaled back and could end 'early in Q3', with a rate rise to potentially materialise 'only a few weeks' later. In the UK, the economy unexpectedly shrank in March which meant the Q1 figure came in at 0.8% vs a consensus forecast of 1.0%.

Whilst macro issues have dominated the narrative in recent weeks, first quarter earnings have continued to come in on both sides of the Atlantic. In Europe, according to Factset, overall EPS grew 42% versus expectations of 20% whilst in the US the comparable figure was 9%, which was 4% ahead of estimates.
