

Markets move higher amid rate rises

US Equities posted further gains last week, finishing the week up 2.1% in euro terms. A busy week for markets, a wave of interest rate announcements filtered through to investors from the Federal Reserve, European Central Bank (ECB) and Bank of England (BoE). In the US the Federal Reserve increased the federal funds rate by 0.25%, lower than previous increases of 0.5% and 0.75%. Markets took this more dovish policy from the Fed in their stride, lowering interest rate expectations for the future and pushing stock prices higher. Earnings reports from large tech companies such as Meta, Apple and Amazon were released. While earnings suggested a slowdown in growth, tech stocks posted gains, particularly in response to companies who announced job cuts.

On Friday however, the release of the US jobs report saw interest rate fears return to some extent due to a surprisingly robust US labour market. The report showed that the US added 517,000 jobs in January, far higher than economists' expectations of 185,000. Last December the figure was 260,000. Friday's shock figures boosted the US dollar against a basket of peers, with the euro/dollar exchange rate finishing the week at 1.07. Across the Atlantic the ECB and BoE both increased rates by a half percentage point respectively. The BoE in particular, was noted for its softer language in terms of future rate increases and recession prospects, suggesting to investors that rates may soon peak. UK equities returned -0.6% last week in euro terms.

Meanwhile Eurozone stocks continued to be a source of gains for investors, returning 1.3% last week. Eurozone stocks have outperformed US stocks so far in 2023 on the back of more attractive valuations and growth prospects with the reopening of China. Western-Chinese relations however were strained somewhat last week after the discovery of an alleged Chinese Spy balloon over Montana in the US. The balloon was subsequently shot down by the US Air Force. Investors are waiting to see how the incident plays out geopolitically.
