

Big Tech leads Q1 Earnings

The busiest week of Q1 earnings season saw technology companies post better than expected reports for the first quarter of 2023. Companies such as Apple, Meta and Alphabet all showed promising growth in earnings, displaying resilience even throughout a higher interest rate environment and a downturn in sales in the previous Q4 2022. The big tech earnings were a cause for optimism for many investors and highlighted that cost cutting measures seen throughout the sector appear to have paid off. US stocks finished the week up, returning 1.1% in euro terms. Despite this however, a midweek dip occurred in stock prices on the back of renewed stress in the banking sector. First Republic Bank, one of the key firms caught up in the March banking turmoil, revealed that the California lender suffered over $100 Billion of deposit outflows in Q1.

The week also ended with less than desirable inflation data, with the Core PCE index (The Federal Reserve's preferred measure of inflation) coming in above expectations at 4.6%. The higher inflation result, along with higher US labour costs, left many investors expecting a stronger likelihood that the Fed will continue with its rate hiking policy this week.

In the Eurozone, stocks finished the week down slightly, returning -0.5% in euro terms. This came as the economic outlook in the 20-member bloc deteriorated on the back of poor Gross Domestic Product (GDP) figures. GDP increased by 0.1% in Q1 of 2023, which although an increase on last period, was below economists' expectations. Germany, Europe's largest economy saw a stagnant figure of 0% growth, narrowly avoiding a technical recession. All eyes in Europe will be on the ECB this week which will give its interest rate decision on Thursday. Consensus expectations are of a 0.25% rate hike, however investors remain tentative as surprise inflation figures could indeed cause a higher 0.50% hike.
