Week in Review

- Global equities (in euro terms) had a strong week as sentiment improved on the back of a Russian-Saudi oil production freeze and perceived stronger conviction from Chinese authorities in respect to controlling Yuan price fluctuations.
- Market concerns abated slightly during the week as FOMC and ECB minutes gave little for the market to digest. However, mixed economic data from both developed countries and China led investors to tread carefully.
- 'Brexit' worries came to the fore during the week as negotiations continued at the EU Summit. With a UK referendum set for 23 June, Sterling currency volatility is also envisaged as the campaign continues.

The global index (in euro terms) rose 4.8% last week which pared back year-to-date losses to just over -9%. The US S&P 500 Index also saw a return of 2.8%, with Euro weakness enhancing returns for Irish investors.

Japan's Tokyo bourse was the strongest performing of the major indexes, up almost of 10% (in euro terms) for the week. Ireland outperformed Europe on a relative basis with a return of 5.7% versus 4.4% for Europe ex UK.

Eurozone bond prices in general were up 0.7% as fixed income investors bring the upcoming March ECB meeting into focus. Year-to-date, Eurozone bonds are up by 3.3% with Germany up 5.8%.

Oil posted a Euro return of 1.8% for the week on the back of the aforementioned production agreement. However it has been falling heavily for the last 18 months, and is still down 40% (in euro terms) over the last 12 months.

The Week Ahead

Thursday	Thursday	Friday
Consensus estimates for January Euro headline inflation is plus 0.4% (year/year) with a core figure of 1.0% (year/year) forecasted.	A downward revision of UK Q4 GDP is expected. A consensus figure of 0.4% versus the first estimate of 0.5% (quarter/quarter) is envisaged.	The second estimate of US Q4 GDP is due to be released, with the consensus view a downward revision from 0.7% to 0.5% (quarter/quarter).
