Week in Review

- Stocks rallied as tax policy reform proposals from the new US administration came into focus, as President Trump stated on Thursday that he would announce a plan in the coming weeks to address the need for 'fundamental comprehensive tax reform' in the US.
- US administration policy was a key focus throughout the week, as hopes rose that Trump's 'border adjustment tax' would run into opposition in the Senate. Markets continue to grapple with the confluence of US policy and the S&P 500 hasn't closed up or down by more than 1% in a single session since December 7.
- Fixed income markets displayed caution in Europe, as bond investors focussed on the upcoming elections in the Netherlands, with Marine Le Pen also garnering further attention in France.
