Week in Review

- The S&P 500 recorded its third-best daily gain over the past year last Wednesday after Democrats took control of the House and Republicans secured the Senate. Health care stocks outperformed with communication services stocks weighing.
- The US Fed kept their federal funds target at 2%-2.25%, citing strength in the labour market and solid economic activity. They also reaffirmed their plans to continue raising rates gradually. The ISM Non-Manufacturing PMI fell to 60.3, but general growth in the services sector remains solid.
- The European Commission said that Eurozone growth would slow through 2020, pressured by trade worries, high oil prices and uncertainty. Italian debt came under added pressure as the EU warned Italy it is poised to breach the EU's budget deficit limit in 2020 if the government continues with its spending plans.
