Week in Review

- Global equities declined but are still showing gains in euro terms year-to-date (+0.7%). Value stocks outperformed growth stocks in the US for the fourth consecutive week, with internet and technology shares amongst the hardest hit.
- On the economic front, trade tensions between the US and China continued to weigh on sentiment, as did the rise in US weekly jobless claims and a decline in consumer sentiment. However, existing home sales in the US did increase more than expected.
- Corporate bonds were once again under pressure, particularly in the high yield sector, where energy is a large segment of the market.
