Global markets are up 10.8% this year in euro terms and while economic growth remains positive, the data continues to point to a slowdown. In conjunction with reducing their 2019 growth forecasts from 1.7% to 1.1%, the European Central Bank (ECB) injected further liquidity into the eurozones banking system to spur growth and economic activity. ECB President, Mario Draghi acknowledged the outlook for the next 22 months had deteriorated and as a result, confirmed that interest rates would remain steady throughout the year. Elsewhere, the U.S. market suffered its first weekly loss of the year and the yield on the 10-year Treasury note touched its lowest level since early January. Meanwhile, volatility, as measured by the VIX, rose to its highest level in over a month. Finally, the Chinese bull market stuttered with a sharp sell-off on Friday as exports slumped in February and Beijing lowered its growth forecasts to 6% from 6.5% for 2019.
