A surprise announcement from the US administration about forthcoming tariffs on Mexican goods triggered a sharp rally in global bond markets, with the 10yr Treasury yield gapping down to 2.12% on Friday in the biggest daily move since the Fed's March meeting, while the 10yr Bund yield fell to a new low of -0.21%. Investors are reassessing the global growth and policy outlook amid escalating trade tensions, as the US market suffered its worst week this year, falling over 2.5%. The trigger for last week's selloff was President Trump's announcement that tariffs of up to 25% on all Mexican goods would be imposed if Mexico does not take decisive steps to fight illegal migration to the US. However, Eurozone lending growth to households picked up to 3.4% YoY in April from 3.3% YoY in March, and US households remain in an upbeat mood with the Conference Board Consumer Confidence Index rising in May.
