Week Ahead

1 July

Eurozone PMI and employment data goes to print. US PMI data is also released.

2 July

OPEC members are in Vienna for the latest meeting of the oil-producing bloc.

5 July

US non-farm payrolls for the month of June are released to the market.

Stocks pulled back from recent highs last week, as investors' awaited news of developments from the G20 summit in Tokyo over the weekend. Another factor that weighed on stocks was mid-week comments from the Federal Reserve, which proved to be less dovish than some commentators had hoped, this news sent 10 year Treasury yields back above 2%. However the yield on the 10 year German bund fell to -0.34% as eurozone economic indicators continued to disappoint.

Equities also saw a large amount of sector dispersion throughout the week, with Materials and Financials strongly outperforming the likes of Utilities and Consumer Staples. Oil was relatively flat over the week as all eyes are on this week's OPEC meeting in Vienna.
