Stocks moved forward once again last week, with US markets hitting fresh highs, albeit on the back of weaker summer trading volumes. Fed Chair Powell did nothing during his semi-annual monetary policy testimony to Congress this week to push back against the market's view that the Fed will cut rates at its July 30-31 meeting. This was slightly contradicted by the core CPI reading from the US, which saw the largest monthly increase since January 2018 (after four consecutive months of tepid readings). Industrial activity in the Eurozone saw some growth last month, whilst UK GDP for May rebounded after a deep decline in April. Earnings season also kicks off this week, with some of the big US financials reporting. So we have a market trinity of US unemployment near historic lows (3.7%), stock markets at record highs, and the market fully expecting an interest rate cut from the Federal Reserve this month.
