

Markets roiled by new COVID variant

Stocks moved sharply lower in the holiday shortened trading week, as concerns in relation to a new COVID variant came to the fore. Stocks in Europe finished down over 4% on Friday, with the US faring better although still down 2.5%. Oil fell over 10% which was the biggest fall since WTI fell into negative price territory in May 2020. Investors flocked to safer assets with the US ten-year treasury yield (which moves inversely to price) down 16 basis points in its biggest move since November of last year.

The week had started in a positive fashion, as on Monday morning President Biden announced that he planned to renominate Jerome Powell as Federal Reserve Chair. Biden also plans to nominate Lael Brainard as the Vice-Chair with markets reacting optimistically to the bipartisan continuity appointment of Powell. The US also saw the lowest level of weekly jobless claims since 1969 as European data also surprised to the upside.

The Eurozone PMIs saw Services rise to 56.6 with manufacturing at 58.6, both well in expansionary territory and driven by strong data in both Germany and France. The UK also saw the fastest rate of new business orders since July which may well set the stage again for serious interest rate rise discussion at the next Bank of England meeting. There is plenty of economic data to look forward to this week, including Chinese PMIs and further inflation data before the US jobs report on Friday. However, it is possible that market sentiment will continue to swing based on the latest COVID updates.
