

Markets boosted by Cooler US Inflation

US Equities finished the week higher in the US as cooling inflation led to improved sentiment amongst investors. On Friday, JPMorgan Chase posted second-quarter profit and revenue that exceeded analysts' expectations thanks to an increase in investment banking fees. However, its share price fell moderately as the release was fully digested. Wells Fargo, which exceeded both revenue and earnings expectations, also saw a decline in its share price due to a 9% decline in net interest income, a key measure for what a bank makes on lending.

The week saw US headline inflation move lower. On Thursday, the US Bureau of Labor Statistics released Consumer Price Index (CPI) figures for June, which came in at 3.0%, below the previous month's figure of 3.3% and below market expectations of a 3.1% figure. On Friday, the Producer Price Index (PPI) was released, which measures the change in the price of goods sold by manufacturers. This came in slightly above expectations at 2.6%, versus a consensus forecast of 2.3%. The rise was largely attributed to services costs and came as somewhat of for a surprise for markets, following the previous session's CPI print.

In the UK, GDP figures came in double the forecasted pace, increasing by 0.4% in May. The rise was attributed to expansion in the services sector and a rebound in housebuilding. In the Eurozone, a relatively quiet week for economic releases left equities mostly flat. German CPI figures released on Thursday showed a 0.1% increase in June, in line with market expectations, whilst in France CPI also came in at 0.1%, in line with forecasts.

In Japan, equities continued their upward march, supported by a depreciated yen. The Japanese yen has reached multi-decade lows in recent weeks against the US dollar as the Bank of Japan ended its negative interest rate and yield curve control policies in March.
