

Stocks close lower amidst recession concerns

The major US indices closed lower last week as investors navigated the busiest week of the quarterly earnings reporting season. Earnings reports this week indicated that the market's performance is increasingly broadening out from the so called Magnificent Seven and other major tech-oriented companies. Data released on Monday on the US services sector surprised economists with stronger-than expected growth in July, as the ISM service sector Purchasing Managers Index (PMI) rose to 51.4 from 48.8 the previous month. A reading above 50 signifies expansion in the services sector. An underwhelming US job market report on Friday sparked fears of a potential recession. The report revealed that the US economy added only 114,000 jobs last month, significantly down from June and well below expectations. The headline unemployment rate rose to 4.3%, its highest since October 2021, up from 4.1% the prior month. Although the Federal Reserve left short-term interest rates unchanged after its midweek policy meeting, expectations for rate cuts in September increased substantially.

Economic growth in the eurozone exceeded expectations in the second quarter of the year. On Tuesday GDP grew at an annualised rate of 0.3% in the second quarter, matching the growth rate of the first quarter. This surpassed the anticipated 0.2% growth, indicating a slightly faster than expected recovery. However, Germany, the eurozone's largest economy, unexpectedly contracted by 0.1%. Additionally, an initial estimate showed that annual inflation in the eurozone rose to 2.6% in July from 2.5% in June. Despite this rise, services inflation eased for the first time in three months.

Japanese equity markets experienced significant losses this week. At its July meeting the Bank of Japan (BoJ) raised its key short-term interest rate to around 0.25% from the previous range of 0% to 0.1%. This was the BoJ's second interest rate hike this year, following its exit from negative interest rate policy in March.

Fact of the Week

After a sell-off on Monday, Japan's Nikkei ended Tuesday up 10.2%, its largest daily gain since October 2008.
