

Equities end the week flat after recovery

In the US, major stock indexes ended the week broadly flat after a volatile period caused by growing fears of a potential recession. Concerns lessened on Thursday as technology and other large-cap stocks improved due to strong quarterly earnings. Additionally, weekly jobless claims were lower than anticipated, dropping by 17,000 for the week, which helped alleviate worries triggered by the previous Friday's July jobs report. Following the release of this data, US stocks rose, and benchmark Treasury yields climbed back above 4%.

Data released on Friday indicated that inflation in Germany, as measured by the Harmonized Index of Consumer Prices (HICP), increased by 2.6% year-on-year in July, aligning with market expectations for the eurozone's largest economy. Following this data release, the EUR/GBP traded in negative territory for the third consecutive day on Friday. Last week, the Bank of England (BoE) reduced its benchmark interest rate to 5.00% from a 16-year high of 5.25%. The UK hinted that the central bank would adopt a cautious approach in its policy normalization process moving forward.

In China, concerns about deflation diminished this week as consumer prices increased. China's consumer prices (CPI) rose by a higher-than-anticipated 0.5% in July, reaching a five-month peak, compared to the 0.2% rise in June. Core CPI, which excludes the volatile costs of food and energy, saw a year-on-year increase of 0.4% in July, down from 0.6% in June. This data offered some much-needed positive news for the world's second-largest economy.
