

ECB cuts interest rates by a further 0.25% - How did markets react?

In the US, equity markets closed the week higher, driven by strong earnings reports, including a boost to the tech sector from Netflix's results. In a positive sign for third-quarter economic growth, US retail sales rose 0.4% in September, up from a 0.1% increase in August, and slightly exceeding the consensus forecast of a 0.3% increase. Consumer spending was strong across the board, with 10 out of the 13 retail categories reporting higher sales for the month.

In Europe, major equity indexes finished the week higher as the European Central Bank (ECB) delivered a second consecutive interest rate cut. As anticipated, the ECB reduced its key deposit rate by 25 basis points to 3.25%, marking the first back-to-back rate cuts in 13 years. The main refinancing operations and marginal lending facility rates were lowered to 3.40% and 3.65%, respectively. ECB President Lagarde noted that the disinflationary process appeared to be "well on track", with eurozone inflation for September revised down to 1.7% from an initial estimate of 1.8%.

In the UK, the consumer price index (CPI) rose by 1.7% in September, marking the lowest level since April 2021. Services inflation, closely monitored by the Bank of England (BoE), slowed to a more than two year low of 4.9%. Additionally, pay pressure eased, with average regular pay, lowering to 4.9% in the three months to August. These readings may pave the way for the BoE to reduce borrowing costs again soon.

Japanese markets ended the week lower. Core CPI rose 2.4% annually, down from 2.8% in August. Separate data revealed that Japan's exports declined by 1.7% in September, marking the first drop in 10 months and signalling weaker demand. While easing inflation in September was anticipated, it sparked speculation that the Bank of Japan may be less likely to raise interest rates again this year.
