

Markets react to U.S. jobs week

South Korean President Yoon Suk Yeol shook global markets on Tuesday evening when he declared martial law, only to revoke the order just a few hours later. In response, U.S.-listed Korean stocks dropped sharply, as did the Korean won, hitting a two-year low against the dollar before recouping some of its losses.

In the US, key labour market data was reported last week. On Monday, the latest job openings and labour turnover survey (JOLTS report) beat expectations and showed that employers had 300,000 more unfilled jobs available on October 30th relative to the month previous. Friday's non-farm payrolls reported that employers added 227,000 jobs last month, while the unemployment rate ticked higher to 4.2%, as anticipated. The S&P 500 and Nasdaq 100 reacted positively and ended the week higher, while the Dow Jones fell into the red after giving back earlier gains. The jobs data reinforced the market's expectation for further rate cuts this month, causing 10-year Treasury yields to decline.

Despite the forced resignation of the French Prime Minister, European equities had a positive week, with the German DAX 40 climbing above the 20,000-point level for the first time. This came after several ECB officials suggested that we may see another rate cut next week. Irish GDP growth was recorded at 3.5% QoQ in Q3 2024, surpassing expectations and combatting a trend of growth contractions in five of the last six quarters. Japanese equities had a strong week, pushing the Nikkei 225 higher amid growing optimism surrounding the economic outlook. In China, the manufacturing PMI index surpassed market estimates and rose to 51.5 in November, up from 50.3 in October, indicating that stimulus efforts are beginning to take effect. Meanwhile, China's 10-year bond yield fell below 2% to its lowest point on record as the market priced in projections for further rate cuts.
