

Bad Intel or just bad intel?

Global equities shrugged off US recession fears last week as significant gains were made across the developed markets. There was a focus on corporate news, with several notable stories emerging from the US in particular. The share price of Apple rose over 13% during the week after the company announced it would invest an additional $100 billion in its US manufacturing operations, bringing the total to $600 billion over the next four years. Meanwhile, US President Trump called for Intel CEO Lip-Bu Tan to resign due to his alleged ties to Chinese semiconductor firms, which Tan has labelled “misinformation”.

European shares posted their biggest weekly gain in 12 weeks as the financial sector continued its rally. Shares of Novo Nordisk jumped after results from rival Eli Lilly’s trial of an experimental weight-loss pill lagged Novo’s obesity treatment. Eli Lilly stock fell over -17%. Reports on Wednesday showed that Eurozone retail sales rose by 0.3% in June, missing forecasts for 0.4% growth.

In the US, the ISM services index contracted to 50.1 in July from 50.8 in June, underperforming consensus estimates for a rise to 51.5. US labour productivity climbed 2.4% in Q2, the largest jump since 2021. The Bank of England cut interest rates to 4% on Thursday, the lowest level in two years. However, the vote was narrower than anticipated at 5:4, resulting in a more hawkish tone. The market is now pricing in the next rate cut to occur in early 2026 rather than late 2025.

The price of oil fell by more than -5% in EUR terms after OPEC announced further plans to increase crude production in September. The price of gold futures reached a record high after reports emerged that the US would place tariffs on 1kg bars in a targeted move against Switzerland, which was also hit with a 39% import levy last week. The White House suggested it would clarify tariffs on gold bars after major gold refineries paused deliveries of bullion to the US.

Fact of the week

US companies bought back $166 billion of their own stock last month, a record amount for the month of July, and 88% higher than the previous record in July 2006.
