Eurozone inflation and unemployment data will be closely watched as it goes to market.

Geopolitical and trade tariff concerns remained to the fore as the leaders' of the world's biggest democracies met in Biarritz over the weekend, at the G7 summit. Progress on Brexit continues to be painstakingly slow, as Prime Minister Johnson canvassed European leaders. Chinese and US tensions ratcheted up further as China announced the imposition of $75 billion of tariffs on US goods, with oil, autos and agricultural imports the main focus areas. Fed Chair Powell attempted to ease market concerns last week, emphasising that the Federal Reserve would 'act as appropriate' in the face of the escalating trade tensions and slowing economic growth. On the economic data front, eurozone PMIs improved slightly for July, but markets still expect to see some policy action from the ECB at their September meeting. Finally, manufacturing and services data in Japan saw good numbers last week, signalling the continued improvement in the economy.
