Normal service resumes across markets this week as tensions between the U.S. and Iran remain high. The main focus for markets following the airstrike has been oil and it could be that crude is in for a very bumpy ride in coming weeks.

Spain's Pedro Sanchez didn't quite get enough to votes to win the first parliamentary vote on forming a government but remains on track to get over the line in the second vote due on Tuesday, ending a long period of political stagnation for the country. In the U.K., two more prominent candidates throw their hats in the ring for the Labour Party leadership. Also worth keeping an eye on is the growing budget battle in Portugal and the ousting of Croatia's president.

European bond sales will get back to business in this first full week of the new year against a backdrop of the U.S.-Iran tensions which may help to keep the asset class popular as a haven play.
