Markets continued their strong start to the year with global equities advancing 2.3% (2.9% in euro terms) last week. The move came on the back of increased optimism that a trade deal will be reached between the U.S. and China. With the Federal Reserve commentary also having turned dovish since the latter part of 2018, fears have dissipated that interest rates will be raised aggressively this year. In fact, some analysts are forecasting no further rate hikes in 2019. Meanwhile, Q4 corporate earnings are on track to have grown 13% from a year ago, which would mark the fifth straight quarter of double digit earnings growth. It wasn't all good news last week, however. Industrial production fell 0.6% in the estimate for January, while retail sales in the U.S. slumped 1.2% in December. Considering that retail sales account for about a quarter of consumer spending and consumer spending accounts for 68% of Gross Domestic Product, this is a figure that needs to be monitored closely. Finally, growth in Europe continues to wane, with Germany just avoiding slipping into recession in the final quarter of the year.
